Edgar has been involved in transportation and transportation insurance for his entire professional career. After receiving a master's degree in transportation management and international business from the University of Maryland he worked for transportation companies in the areas of operations, fleet planning, pricing and tariffs. After these positions he was handed the responsibility for the insurance and claims program for an international and domestic air and ocean freight forwarder.

Edgar began working for insurance companies when he joined the Chubb Group of Insurance Companies in their marine claims and subrogation department. During his 23 years with Chubb he handled all types of domestic and international marine claims involving cargo damage, carrier liability, hull and liability claims for both pleasure and commercial craft and marine general liability. He is now with Allianz Global Corporate and Specialty where he handles ocean cargo claims in excess of $1,000,000 in the U.S. and around the world. He has trained co-workers in handling marine claims and spoken before claims and industry groups on transportation claims and policy interpretation.

A native New Yorker, Edgar now lives in the Seattle area where he enjoys many outdoor activities as well as being on the steering committee of two volunteer organizations.
